EPISODIC BREAKDOWN

11. Charles Jencks and his Garden of Cosmic Speculation

By tradition, gardens and parks tend to tell stories. Charles Jencks, the leading architectural critic of postmodernism, transforms his knowledge of the complexity theories into a fascinating garden amidst the rough Scottish hill country, which deals with a theme no less than the universe.

12. The Water Gardens of Anthony Paul

In a sheltered valley in Surrey lies England's most beautiful sculpture park. The area has been laid out by the New Zealand garden architect Anthony Paul. The selection of sculptures is made by his wife, the gallery owner Hannah Peschar. The natural garden with its wonderful sculptures by mostly young English sculptors is so convincing that Prince Charles himself once came along for shopping.

13. The Plant World of Breimann & Bruun

The Hamburg based landscape architects, Breimann & Bruun, are recognized today as among the world's most innovative and active creators in the field. In this episode we look at private gardens that have been created according to the designs of Henning Breimann and Bertel Bruun.
