EPISODIC BREAKDOWN

1. Land of the Lynx

One of the most iconic habitats of the Iberia is the Mediterranean forest, the land of the Iberian Lynx, a unique and fascinating feline, with a history of success in conservation efforts. Cork and Holm Oaks are the masters of these magnificent woodlands. And these woodlands are home to unique and endemic fauna. Which makes this region one of the main biodiversity hotspots on Earth.

2. Highlands

Mountains are responsible for the whole morphology of Iberia. They are also the birthplace of the rivers that distribute life throughout the territory. Many forests can be found here, each one with its distinct ecosystem. Iberian mountain ranges have different faces and personalities, and so do their wild inhabitants.

3. Coastal Wonders

The coast of the Iberian Peninsula meets both the Atlantic Ocean and the Mediterranean Sea. It's one of the richest oceanic habitats of Europe. It hosts thousands of species of wild animals. Along 3000 sq km of coastline we can find rugged cliffs, dune systems and extensive sand beaches, estuaries and marshlands. All these landscapes are a geological testimony to the past of the Peninsula, and each one of them contains different life forms, contributing towards the balance of the natural world.
